

CSPO Perspectives

CSPO Talmudic Scholar and Associate Director David Guston interprets the “Keynote Address at the First Sinai Conference on Bioethics”: ... my purpose here is really to address the very challenging question that Moses has, in his latest publication, quite literally thrown at our feet. ... In this sixth commandment, Moses proposes that we forbid murder, or the killing of another human being. It's appropriate to the spirit of open discussion and free exchange that Moses has raised this question. But I respectfully disagree with Moses, and perhaps with many of you out there, that killing should be forbidden... Now available on the CSPO website at http://www.cspo.org/ourlibrary/perspectives/sinai_april_1_2007.htm.

Four simple letters, but with global significance – see all the CSPOs around the world at <http://www.cspo.org/home/cspoideas/aroundworld.htm>.

CSPO Goes Robotic

Fully embracing both the diversity and technology movements in human resources, CSPO has hired two sheet-metal based employees to investigate how robots are impacted by the discourse on science and society. Check out one of them at <http://www.cspo.org/home/newatcspo/documents/gorobo.jpg> or come by the office to say “Hi” to both of them. Robots by ASU artist Ryan Murray.

Best wishes from CSPO on this first day of April.
